Beauty secrets of the East may sound a little trite as to be almost cliché. But the fact remains that women of the East have always had their own beauty secrets.

One of the most common ingredients used in beauty treatment, especially facial, is rice.

The rice grain is usually washed and pounded very finely. It is then diluted with water and used as mask for the face. After the mask is dry, it is then washed off. The user will find her facial skin soft and moist. This was the only beauty treatment ingredient in the olden days.

It is however not lost as a local entrepreneur Catherine Kingan of Keningau has kept her mother's recipe and is now marketing her beauty product actively.

This friendly vivacious lady who hails from Keningau says she has recollecting the ingredients used by her mother were not easy but after her experiment with various ingredients with the basic powdered rice was successful; she came up with two facial products.

The first product is made of rice and herbs which when applied to the face will ensure smooth skin. This is the product she uses to ensure that her face is free of blemishes. The second product is made from black rice and honey. This product when applied to the face will ensure that the face is supple and moist. Her products are labelled Aloris Masker.

The products are now available in the market and are now actively being promoted nationally. She says she wants to share her beauty secret with the public, especially women who are having facial skin problems.

People with facial skin problems are not the only ones
